online discussion groups for classicists

A variety of internet discussion groups exist which offer the benefits of attending conferences and networking with colleagues without the expense and hassle of travel. A fairly complete list can be found at www.latinteach.com/lists.html.

Below you will find URLs to pages with information on how to join the lists.

LATINTEACH: www.latinteach.com/join.html

AP LATIN: www.collegeboard.org/ap/latin/list.html

CAMBRIDGE LATIN: groups.yahoo.com/group/CambridgeLatin

OXFORD LATIN: www.topica.com/lists/oxford-latin

If you aren't connected with your colleagues in classics, perhaps now is the time to correct this.

Being a teacher of Latin or Greek in Texas does not mean you have to teach in isolation as it once may have. There are several organizations which serve classicists, each of which have journals and newsletters, as well as informative websites.

Which one is right for you? Take some time to visit each of the websites to find out. For instance, the Texas Classical Association website includes articles on pedagogy, information for new teachers, special pages for AP Latin, JCL and more. The Classical Association for the Middle West and South includes a special set of pages for their Committee for the Promotion of Latin.

Although most of these websites contain forms for joining, I have provided membership information and mailing addresses for each organization for your convenience.

You may find what you need in an online internet discussion group. I highly recommend Latinteach, which currently has over 400 members from all over the US and around the world. Teachers on this wonderful list share tips, tricks, materials, and advice.
